Figure 1: Robots: (a) Pioneer robots used for multi-robot mapping. (b) Pioneer robot with 2 laser range finders used for 3D mapping. (c) Urban robot for indoor and outdoor exploration. The urban robot's odometry is extremely poor. All robots have been manufactured by RWI/ISR. 2 Mapping At the most fundamental level, the problem of concurrent mapping and localization can be treated as a maximum likelihood estimation problem, in which one seeks to find the most likely map given the data.

An example of an octree map queried for occupied voxels at several depths is shown in Fig. 3. In its most basic form, octrees can be used to model a boolean property. In the context of robotic mapping, this is usually the occupancy of a volume. If a certain volume is measured as occupied, the corresponding node in the octree is initialized.
